

THE STUDY BREAKS REMOTE JOURNALISM INTERNSHIP

As a part of the student journalism internship team, you will be responsible for writing three news reports a week, each between 450-550 words, for the Study Breaks website.

The primary focus of the articles will be breaking college news, but covering other trending topics and developing stories will also be a critical part of the role.

Through the internship, students will learn to write impartially, accurately and on a tight deadline, as well as how to create engaging headlines, subtitles and ledes. They will become well versed in the basics of journalism, such as writing in the inverted pyramid, using AP style, quoting sources and remaining objective.

Interns will participate in individual review sessions bimonthly, where their writing will be critiqued and they will receive tailored writing feedback. They will learn the basics of Wordpress, Google Analytics, Slack, HARO and Google Trends, and will collaborate with their team and other Study Breaks writers to produce their reports.

Ultimately, the goal of the program is two-fold: to help make Study Breaks the go-to source for college news across the country, and to drive traffic to the website, which our long-form articles will retain.

WHAT YOU'LL RECEIVE

- Current college student with an .edu email address
- Passion for journalism and writing
- Able to commit to the time restraints and writing workload
- Send in two non-fiction writing samples

THE SPECIFICS

- This is an unpaid internship. College credit is provided on request.
- Expect to work ten hours per week.
- The internship lasts four months.
- Student journalists will write two news articles per week of 450-550 words
- The internship is remote, so you can work from wherever you are.

Deadline for applications: May 14, 2018

Internship dates: May 28, 2018 – Sept. 28, 2018