

THE STUDY BREAKS REMOTE CONTENT CREATORS INTERNSHIPS

Study Breaks is a print magazine and website written exclusively by college students, and we're looking for student content creators for the fall 2018 semester.

As a part of the student content creators team, you will be responsible for writing three news reports a week, each between 450-550 words, for the Study Breaks website.

The primary focus of the articles will be trending topics and breaking news within the pop culture arena, specifically television, film, music, literature, social media and other related media.

Through the internship, students will learn to write stories designed to drive engagement on a deadline, including how to write intriguing headlines, subtitles and ledes. They will become well versed in the basics of journalism, such as writing in the inverted pyramid, using AP style, quoting sources and remaining objective.

Interns will participate in monthly individuals reviews, where their writing will be critiqued and they will receive writing feedback. They will learn the basics of Wordpress, Slack, social media engagement and trend-tracking

THE REQUIREMENTS

- Current college student with an .edu email address
- Passion for covering trending topics and media
- Able to commit to the time restraints and writing workload
- Send in two non-fiction writing samples

THE SPECIFICS

- This is an unpaid internship. College credit is provided on request.
- Expect to work 10 hours a week
- The internship lasts four months.
- Student content creators will write three articles per week of 500-550 words
- The internship is remote, so you can work from wherever you are.
- The fall 2018 program runs from Sept. 28, 2018, to Jan. 28, 2019, and applications close Sept. 14, 2018.